

QUEST FOR SHARK

by Andy Evangelidis

Some of you may have heard of Lewis Johnsen and some of you may have not. Lewis is a shark hunter. He has hunted down and caught one of five sharks that became famous in Hollywood over twenty-four years ago. If the first thing that came to your mind was the film "Jaws", you're way off track.

Back in the 1980's, Lewis along with many other adolescents at the time, watched a movie called "Risky Business". The film starred Tom Cruise and Rebecca De Mornay in a flick about business, sex & automobiles; namely the Porsche 928. Yes, this was the film about the 928 that sank to the bottom of Lake Michigan in suburban Chicago. Who can forget that scene?

Lewis has tracked down and purchased one of five 928's that were used in the movie "Risky Business" and he's produced a documentary film to show everyone how he pulled it off. The film is destined to play at the 2008 Sundance Festival in Utah and Lewis needs our help in order to win this prestigious honor. Let's give him a helping hand in doing so.....shall we?

First, visit Lewis's site at www.rb928.com and read all about his endeavors and achievements with respect to the "Quest for Risky Business 928". Afterwards, send an e-mail to the Sundance Film Festival institute institute@sundance.org letting them know that you want to see "Quest for RB928" in the competition for 2008. If all goes well and the film makes the elite Sundance "few", there may even be a 928 following at the event in Utah.

Lewis needs our support so let's help renew interest in the best GT ever built!
